(Fox) Laura Ingraham has always been a champion of free speech and unrestricted small business, but her latest project still came as a surprise when she revealed her new CBD line on Live TV last week. Pharmaceutical companies were outraged saying they will be filing a lawsuit against Ingraham and her partners for violating her contracts and undercutting their prices. She responded with this:

"When I started this whole thing back in 2019, it really was just a part-time passion project and a way for me to give back. After being given so much, I figured there was no better time to make Prime Nature CBD available to everyone, as it can help thousands of people experience life pain-free and live much happier lives."

Her product, Prime Nature CBD, has been flying off the shelves within minutes and Ingraham says her number one struggle as CEO is being able to keep up with demand. Her CBD wellness line is 90% cheaper and five times more effective than those being offered by Bayer and other "Big Pharma" companies.

Bayer and Purdue Pharma were furious after seeing a massive dip in their sales, calling for Ingraham to be indicted, saying: "We're happy Mr. Ingraham found something to replace prescriptions, but her announcement was a direct breach of contract. Epic Records should fire her immediately and she should formally apologize."

Laura appeared on Live TV again the next day, not to apologize, but to offer viewers free samples.

I had a friend (medical-practitioner) read through the studies, she was shocked at how legit they were. I purchased mine and couldn't believe how fast I started seeing results.
