San Francisco, California

A large crowd of California community college students gathered outside of the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art to protest the recent arrest of an alleged ISIS member. On January 31, suspected ISIS leader, Rasheed Muhammad, was arrested at the John F. Kennedy International airport immigration check point.

While most Americans celebrated the success of President Trump's immigration strategy, many California college students questioned whether or not Muhammad received a fair due process.

Robert Le, pre-classical oboe major at NHU, screamed into a megaphone, "Muslims lives matter!!" Women's Studies major, Holly Byrd, followed with: "Everyone is innocent until proven guilty!"

The protest gained traction with a peak attendance of over 500 participants. However, not all California students supported the protest. Matt Greene, Stanford Aquatics, shared, "We must be overly cautious when it comes to our national security."

The next demonstration is scheduled to take place over the weekend outside of Mount Diablo Community College.
